Purpose:	This policy aims to set out MITSkills position regarding how to deal with harassment/bullying in the workplace/centre.

We want all learners and staff to feel that they can learn and work happily without having to put up with any behaviour which makes them feel uncomfortable or threatened.

We consider that harassment (including bullying) is any form of behaviour which is unwanted, unwelcome and which puts people in unpleasant or threatening situations.

Individual learners and staff have different levels of sensitivity, and we recognise this. We also recognise that harassment may take a variety of forms, from verbal comments to physical action – such as isolating people or staring at them or refusing to co-operate or bullying.

What to do if you are worried about harassment

There are two options for staff and learners who feel they are being harassed. The first is to deal with the issue informally, which may simply mean telling someone that his or her behaviour is causing offence and asking that it should not happen again. (It may be that the individual is unaware that his or her behaviour is causing offence).

The other option for learners is to use a formal approach to ensure that the issue is dealt with by talking to your Assessor, Work based Trainer, Delivery Staff, or the Company Directors at MITSkills. For staff using a formal approach is to talk to your line manager or one of the Company Directors.

You should always give exact details about the behaviour of the individuals you think are harassing you and use examples which support what you are saying. You should indicate how you felt about the situation – for example whether it embarrassed or humiliated you or made you feel unsafe or made you angry.

You must not ignore the problem you face and should always contact your Assessor, Work Based Trainer, delivery staff (line manager in the case of staff) or a Company Director if you feel it is appropriate to do so or if you feel that you cannot handle the situation. Making a complaint is a serious issue and it will be regarded as such within MITSkills and all individuals making a complaint will be given appropriate support.

All who use or work in MITSkills are entitled to be treated with respect and understanding, and to participate in any activity free from intimidation.

All staff at MITSkills are expected to listen actively to young people and other learners and act appropriately on information received to ensure that a safe, secure, positive environment exists.

MITSkills regards bullying as a serious offence and will apply Disciplinary Procedure where appropriate.

The Nature of Bullying

Bullying may be defined as the repeated or intentional abuse of power by an individual or group with the intent and motivation to cause distress to another individual or group.

It may be physical, sexual, verbal, or psychological in nature. It may occur frequently or infrequently, regularly, or irregularly, but it should be taken seriously even if it has only occurred on one occasion.

Bullying is not a phenomenon which occurs solely between young people. The above definition can also be seen to characterise some adult/adult, adult/child, and child/adult relationships. In more serious instances where adults abuse their power over a young person, or a young person does over another young person bullying may be viewed as child abuse and should be seen within this context.

Not all aggressive behaviour is bullying. Some individuals may feel they are being bullied, even when there is no intention from others to cause them distress. Such perceptions of bullying should be taken seriously, and action taken to address them.

Why it is important to do something about bullying?

Bullying is always damaging to those involved. The victim, the bully and those who witness or even know about the bullying are affected.

Victims

Victims may spend their lives in fear. They often feel isolated from their peers and may believe that it is something about themselves which has led the bully to pick on them.

The victim's life may be characterised by unhappiness, a sense of desolation and desperation and exclusion from normal social experiences. Those feelings can permeate all aspects of the victim's life and may lead to a strong desire to escape the situation by running away from home, truanting from school, college, absences from work, and in some cases, self-harming or taking their own life.

The victims of bullying may have reduced self-esteem and self-worth and their performance in school, college, work, and other areas often deteriorates. Research evidence has shown that victims of bullying may be more likely to experience mental health problems and that they are more likely to become bullies themselves.

Bullying Behaviour is not a natural behaviour pattern and should not be seen as such. People who bully are likely to experience difficult and unhappy relationships with their peers and frequently need help to overcome these difficulties. People who bully are unlikely to stop while they can continue unchallenged.

Cyber Bullying

Bullying also occurs by misuse of technologies e.g., virtual learning platforms, emails, text messages, social media, and the internet.

What is cyberbullying?

Cyberbullying is bullying with the use of digital technologies. It can take place on social media, messaging platforms, gaming platforms and mobile phones. It is repeated behaviour, aimed at scaring, angering or shaming those who are targeted. Examples include:

- spreading lies about or posting embarrassing photos of someone on social media
- sending hurtful messages or threats via messaging platforms
- impersonating someone and sending mean messages to others on their behalf.

Face-to-face bullying and cyberbullying can often happen alongside each other. But cyberbullying leaves a digital footprint – a record that can prove useful and provide evidence to help stop the abuse.

Learners if they are being cyber bullied should keep evidence (for example via screen shots) – and report it to a member of staff, staff should record what they are told and ask the learner not to delete any evidence, staff should report it to our safeguarding lead or Senior Management.

All occurrences must be tackled with equal importance. Learners must be aware that by forwarding inappropriate messages or images, they are equally as culpable as the originator. Learning coaches will monitor sessions in the learning programme which deal with bullying and how to protect yourself on-line.

Staff are required to report where they believe Cyber Bullying is occurring, or where a learner reports an incident of cyberbullying. Learners or staff involved in cyberbullying will be subject to disciplinary action.

Prejudice based and Discriminatory Bullying

Respect for All states: 'Prejudice-based bullying is when bullying behaviour is motivated by prejudice based on an individual's actual or perceived identity; it can be based on characteristics unique to a child or young person's identity or circumstance.'

To address the years of unfavourable treatment experienced by some groups, The Equality Act 2010 makes it unlawful to discriminate against people with a 'protected characteristic'. These are:

- Age
- Disability
- Gender reassignment
- Pregnancy and maternity
- Marriage and civil partnership
- Race
- Sex
- Religion or belief
- Sexual orientation

Bullying individuals on the basis of these characteristics is discriminatory and learners or staff if involved in will be subject to disciplinary action and referred to authorities including the police.

Prejudice-based bullying includes the protected characteristics, but prejudice can and does extend beyond these and can lead to bullying for many other reasons.

Additional support needs can arise for any reason for any length of time. Additional support may be required to overcome needs arising from learning environment; health or disability; family circumstances or social and emotional factors. A child or young person may be bullied because they have an additional support need and, crucially, being bullied can also lead to an additional support need.

Age: Although prejudice and discrimination based on age is not applicable in school settings, it can affect children and young people in settings such as the workplace, in further and higher education, and in wider society.

Asylum Seekers and Refugees: Stigma, caused by a lack of knowledge and understanding of asylum seekers and refugees, can mean children with this status may be at greater risk of being bullied. In addition, reluctance to burden parents or carers with extra worries can allow bullying to go undetected and continue.

Body image and physical appearance can be hugely important to children and young people, with bullying because of body image having the potential to negatively impact upon their wellbeing.

Disablist bullying: People who bully others may see children and young people with disabilities as being less able to defend themselves and/or tell an adult what has happened. The bullying behaviour is likely to be focused upon their specific disability or disabilities, whether they are in mainstream schooling or in specialist provision.

Gypsy/Travellers: This group of children and young people are a particularly discriminated against and marginalised group, and concerns about bullying are especially acute for secondary schools. Perceived risks about bullying and parents' own experiences of discriminatory behaviour may lead to low levels of enrolment and poor attendance for Gypsy/Traveller children and young people, as well as early exit from formal education. Other Traveller families, such as Roma, may have similar concerns.

Sexual orientation & homophobic bullying: Bullying based on sexual orientation is motivated by a prejudice against lesbian, gay or bisexual (LGB) people. It is also commonly referred to as 'homophobic bullying' but can also be expanded to recognise the specific experiences of bisexual young people using the term 'biphobic bullying'.

Children and young people do not necessarily have to be gay, lesbian or bisexual themselves to experience 'homophobic bullying'. This type of bullying may be directed towards young people perceived to be LGB; those that do not conform to gender norms; and those who have gay friends or family. Although homophobic bullying is distinct from sexist and transphobic bullying, it is related to these forms of bullying through underlying sexist attitudes.

Intersectionality: It's important to understand the different and unequal social and economic outcomes for particular groups, based on interactions between race, class, gender, sexual orientation, disability, age and ethnicity.

In the context of anti-bullying, we must consider people's experiences of belonging to one or more of these groups, people's prejudice towards them and how this can lead to inequality in attainment and wellbeing.

Care Experienced children and young people: are vulnerable to bullying behaviour for a number of reasons, such as regular changes in schools or where they are placed. Forming relationships with peers and adults can be made even more difficult due to early childhood adversity.

Marriage/Civil Partnership: Where learners will experience direct prejudice and discrimination as a result of being in a same sex marriage or civil partnership, there could be instances of indirect discrimination if they are associated with someone who is.

This type of discrimination can also affect young people in other settings, such as workplaces, further and higher education and in wider society.

Racial bullying: Children and young people from minority ethnic groups often experience bullying based on perceived differences in dress, communication, appearance, beliefs and/or culture as well as their skin colour and accent.

The status of the ethnic group a child belongs to (or people assume they belong to) can often lead to a child or young person experiencing bullying behaviour. This can arise from a misguided and/or learned belief that they are less valued and 'deserve' to be treated differently, or with less respect.

Religion and belief: Lack of knowledge and understanding about the traditions, beliefs and etiquette of different faiths can lead to religious intolerance.

Lack of awareness about the differences in practices of religions such as prayer times, dietary requirements, fasting and the wearing of religious clothing or articles of faith can result in misunderstandings and stereotyping, which may lead to bullying. People who have no religion or belief are also protected under the Equality Act.

Sectarianism: Most people understandably associate Sectarianism with religion, however the reality of prejudice means that your family background, the football team you support, the community you live in, the school you attend and even the colour of your clothing can mark you out for sectarian abuse - whatever your beliefs may be.

In Scotland, sectarianism is most often related to Protestant and Roman Catholic divisions within Christianity but can also relate to other religions, such as Sunni and Shia Muslims within Islam, and Orthodox and Reform Jews within Judaism.

Sexism and gender: Bullying in the form of derogatory language and the spreading of malicious rumours can be used to regulate both girls' and boys' behaviour. These terms can be of an explicit sexual nature and it is worth noting that many can involve the use of terms for people who are gay and lesbian as a negative towards a person's masculinity or femininity.

Sexism and gender stereotypes feed into homophobia, biphobia and transphobia. Gender stereotyping, based on the notion of acceptable and unacceptable male and female behaviour, can leave children and young people who are not perceived to conform to these notions vulnerable to indirect and direct bullying.

Gender identity and transphobic bullying: The term 'transgender' is an umbrella-term for those whose 'gender identity' or expression differs in some way from the gender assigned to them at birth. Gender identity reflects an individual's internal sense of self as being male, female, or an identity between or outside the two.

Transgender people face significant societal prejudice, largely because they are perceived as not conforming to gender stereotypes, expectations and norms. As a result, transgender or gender 'variant' children and young people can be particularly vulnerable to bullying, such as transphobic and homophobic name calling or deliberately mis-gendering them.

An individual may also experience transphobic bullying as a result of a perception that a parent, relative or other significant figure is transgender.

Young Carers: The lives of young carers can be significantly affected by their responsibility to care for a family member who has a physical illness or disability, mental health problem, sensory or learning disability or issues with the misuse of drugs or alcohol.

Young carers are at risk of bullying for a variety of reasons. Depending on responsibilities at home, they may find themselves being unable to fully participate in school or after-school activities or 'fun stuff'. This can make it difficult for them to form relationships; it can hinder successful transitions or lead to educational difficulties.

Socio-economic prejudice: Bullying due to socio-economic status can take place in any community. Small differences in perceived family income, living arrangements, social circumstances or values can be used as a basis for bullying behaviours.

These behaviours, such as mocking speech patterns, accents, belongings, clothing, etc. can become widespread through those considering themselves to be in the dominant social economic group. Bullying of children who endure parental substance misuse can also be prevalent.

MITSkills policy is to raise awareness of this type of discrimination via staff CPD and by promoting equality and diversity within our team and in the learning environment and delivery, developing a culture of inclusivity and openness reducing the chance of bullying by making clear our position of zero tolerance.

Staff are expected to challenge bullying of any type and report it accordingly. Where staff or learners are involved in bullying they will be subject to disciplinary action, and reporting to the authorities, which can include the police.

Staff must not ignore any learner raising issues of bullying but must record it and report it to the safeguarding lead and or senior management. Staff and learners are to report where they believe they are aware of prejudice or discriminatory bullying via any member of staff or Safeguarding lead or Senior Management.

Peer on Peer Abuse

Learners aged under 19 can abuse other learners also under 19, this is a safeguarding issue. This is generally referred to as peer-on-peer abuse and can take many forms. This can include (but is not limited to) bullying (including cyberbullying); sexual violence and sexual harassment; physical abuse such as hitting, kicking, shaking, biting, hair pulling, or otherwise causing physical harm; sexting and initiating/hazing type violence and rituals.

MITSkills staff will report where they believe they have reason to suspect peer on peer abuse, via the Safeguarding lead and follow our safeguarding policy. MITSkills learners should report where they believe they are a victim of peer-on-peer abuse, cyberbullying, bullying or harassment, to any member of staff, We are a supportive organisation and will ensure that your concerns are dealt with, our Senior Managers, Safeguarding lead and support team are here to help.

Bullying behaviour does not just affect the victim and the perpetrator. Those who witness or know of bullying may live in fear that it will be their turn next. Bullying promotes poor models of behaviour and may encourage others to imitate these models. People who have been bullied in one setting may well become bullies in another. For children transferring from primary to secondary schools the fear of bullying is widespread. This may also apply when transferring from school to college, or college to work. Evidence has shown that bullying is a major concern for parents and young people of all ages.

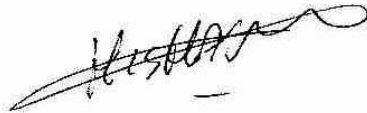

Organisations which encourage or even tolerate bullying are less effective. MITSkills has a zero tolerance of bullying.
